UK Centre for Evidence Implementation in Adult Social Care
The Health Foundation and the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) are working together to create a UK Centre for Evidence Implementation in Adult Social Care.

We know there are some really good things that are happening in social care across the UK.

But because social care can be different in each area, it can be difficult for staff to share and use information about what is working well.

This new Centre will look at really good examples of where adult social care services have made a difference to the lives of people who use services.

Looking at different ways of offering social care across the UK is important but also challenging.

1
People who work in social care need to be supported better so that they can use the best evidence to put new ways of working into practice.

The Centre will help those working in social care to make changes and improve services to make a difference to the lives of people who use services.

The Centre will work at a local, regional and national level. All of the work the Centre carries out will be done in partnership with people who use services.

The Centre will be run by people with experience of social care, including people who use services. An advisory group will check that the Centre is doing its job properly.

The Centre will be open for 7 years and will have £15 million pounds to do its work.
What will the Centre do?

• The Centre will support staff working in social care to use research to support people in care across the UK.

• The Centre will understand what is happening in adult social care to help make services better across the UK.

• The information the Centre gets will be used for local, regional and national policies and plans.

• The Centre will help to link policy makers, social care organisations, commissioners, academics and people who use services together.

• Supporting local areas to build their skills, so that they can carry out evaluations to find out what is working and what doesn’t work.

• Sharing all of the work we carry out across the UK.
As the Centre grows it will:

• Work across the UK.

• Work locally with groups and people who use services.

• Have a plan of work that shows what the Centre will be doing.

• Be set up in a way that creates the best outcomes for adult social care.
